NHK combined cutting-edge 4K technologies with its wealth of knowhow in scientific analysis of sports to investigate the secrets behind the physical prowess of two of Russia's top synchronized swimmers. This documentary not only beautifully captures the swimmers' performance, but also reveals for the first time the oxygen consumption in their muscles and brains, and how their bodies have evolved to gain an ability akin to that of aquatic mammals. Russia's golden duo shows how years of targeted training can make the impossible...possible.

Adam Crapser was born in Korea but had to be sent to the United States for adoption at the age of 3 with his sister. After being abandoned by his first adoptive parents, Crapser found a new home at 12, but the family were abusive to all of their adoptive children. He himself later got into trouble with the law, which made him liable for deportation, and during the process it turned out that his adoptive parents had never sought US citizenship for him. At the age of 42, he is sent back to Korea and reunites with his birth mother. Crapser will now start a new life in his new home with a new name - the name he was born - Shin Song-hyuk.

In this programme, we are introduced to Amanda, whose passion for the water changed her life forever when she broke her neck and suffered a spinal injury after diving from a surfboard. Four years on, we look back on her rehabilitation, where she is now being a wife and mother of two, and the sheer determination it took to get back to independence and in the water again.

On The Red Dot - In My Parents' Shoes (Ep 2)

This episode follows three children as they return to their parents' homeland to rediscover their roots. The children, between 7 and 11 years old, have spent most of their lives in Singapore, after their parents settled here either as new citizens or permanent residents. Although the parents from China, India and the Philippines celebrate their children's integration into Singapore, they also worry that their children may not appreciate their local heritage and traditions. Parents are afraid that their children have grown too accustomed to the modern lifestyle and forget how traditional practises were carried out in the past. In this episode, Nina, Wenxuan and Priya take on the chores their parents used to do – from slaughtering livestock to working in banana plantation.
