T4P MEDIA AWARDS

BRINGING PEOPLE TOGETHER, HEALING THE PLANET, PROMOTING POSITIVE PEACE

THEMES COVERED BY THE COMPETITION

We are looking for inspiring stories of people and communities overcoming difficulties and differences to work and live together, stories about re-thinking and changing our relations with environment and living in harmony with nature and stories about changing attitudes and mindsets and nurturing culture of tolerance and conflict/disasters prevention .

Programmes eligible for entry into the competition can cover a wide range of topics that fall in three main areas. The first area is Living Ethically and Sustainability on a Shared Planet. The second one is Living Well with Super Diversity. That includes building inter-group solidarity (unity in diversity) and overcoming hate speech, discrimination and oppression. Examples of Transformative Education through media, cultural and community activities are the third area covered by the T4Pm Media Awards. The Awards will honour innovative and creative Radio, TV and Digital Media content reflecting these three themes.

1. Transformative Education

Programmes showcasing initiatives and practices that improve understanding of the roots of social and economic poverty, hunger and marginalization of peoples and how to resolve these problems and engage in individual and social action to build more just and sustainable communities and nations.

Programmes focusing on lessons on disaster preparedness education or emergency education as well as to integrate perspectives from environmental or ecological justice (e.g. how environmental destruction, including the effects of climate change, disproportionately make negative impacts on marginalized peoples).

2. Humanity's Relationship with Nature, including coping with climate change and biodiversity loss

Programmes on how human beings can live in dynamic and caring relationships with nature that are not destructive but rather are creative and sustainable for present and future generations to survive according to the values and principles of social, cultural, ecological and spiritual well-being to promote building ethical and sustainable relationships between humanity and nature.

3. Living Well with Diversity, fostering human flourishing and intercultural understanding

We are living in a modern world where societies and communities are hyper connected and mobility and mixing of people is accelerating. Furthermore, diversity is no longer simply a matter of dual national, ethnic, linguistic or cultural backgrounds. Rather, our diversity reflects complex intersecting identity markers that cross cultural systems, socio-economic status, migration histories, religious beliefs, life style choices, sexual orientations and other subjective and personal narratives.

The competition is looking for programmes on how can human beings live together as individuals, communities, members of societies and nations and global citizens in relationships which are not unequal, exploitative, greedy, and consumer-driven but rather are compassionate, just, sharing and ethical.

Another example are programmes that aim to generate transformative positive change at the level of individuals, institutions and communities by educating to respect, preserve and promote linguistic diversity to foster peaceful co-existence and mitigate against hate speech, political violence, discrimination and social harms.
